—A sharper is playing a successful game on the banks in several Iowa towns, which is described as follows: The manipulator goes to some town and purchases suitable property and commences the business of handling grain. He opens his accounts with several banks, and then commences shipping grain to commission houses, drawing against the same as he ships it. When he is established with a commission house, he draws without attaching any bill of lading, and holds his bill over a day or two. He then makes a draft on the same grain and attaches a bill of lading, gets it cashed at one of the banks where he does business and leaves the country. —Ex

—The Hicks & Miller Tea company is the name of a mercantile corporation just organized in this city, of which T. H. Beekman is president, James P. Hicks vice president, and Frank L. Miller secretary and treasurer. Of the standing of the members of the firm little need be said. Everybody knows the genial and energetic Jim Hicks, who has represented Turner, Frazer & Co. on the road for the past twelve years, and has as many friends to-day as any man who travels in the Missouri valley. For several years past Frank L. Miller has been associated with the wholesale houses of Wilson & Kennard, Kennard & Fisher, and H. C. Fisher, and is distinguished for his enterprise and superior business capacity. The new house will open January 1st, and, possessing the elements of success, will take rank with the very first houses in this city. The house will handle teas, cigars, spices, etc. —St. Joseph Gazette.

The two last named gentlemen, Messrs Hicks and Miller have many warm friends in Oregon who will be pleased to learn of their engaging in business on their "own hook." —A shocking accident occurred Monday at the VanCamp mill. The little five-year-old son of S. B. Long was playing about the saw mill, and getting upon the railway to look at the saw, which at the time, was at a stand, the engineer not seeing the little fellow, started the machinery, and the little fellow had his right arm entirely severed and shattering the bone so badly that amputation was necessary. He also received a severe gash over the eye. Surgeons from Oregon were sent for performed the amputation and at last accounts the little sufferer was resting quite easy.

—It may not be generally known but it is a fact that the law requires the recorder of deeds to deliver to each grand jury a list of all marriage licenses issued by him and not returned to him, together with the names of those to whom the licenses were issued. It will be the duty of the grand jury to summon the parties to whom the recorder issues such licenses not returned, and learn from them by whom they were married; and the person solemnizing the marriage will be promptly indicted for not returning such license. Ministers, justices of the peace and others who have solemnized marriages since this law went into effect, July 1st, are cautioned that if they have not complied with its provisions, and returned the marriage license in every case where they have performed the ceremony, they are liable to indictment and a fine of five hundred dollars.

—Col. Frederick Ingham, of whom Edward Everett Hale writes so much, is certainly a remarkable person. Mr. Hale's latest story, which will appear in the Christmas Number of Harper's Magazine, tells of Col. Ingham's journey, and of how he reached the North Pole, and of how he saw his "double" there. This tale, which out-Verne's Jules Verne, is founded on a theory of sleep and of dreams which will interest and pleasantly delude Mr. Hale's many readers.

—The railroad bridge at Rulo, Nebraska, gave way before a tremendous weight of ice on Friday last and eight sections of the bridge were entirely carried away. A long train of freight cars were just in the act of passing over the bridge when it gave way, and two cars of grain were thrown into the water and one of them carried away with the bridge. The other one, however, was caught by the transfer boat and towed ashore. The damage is great, but no lives were lost.

—The case of State vs. Jno. C. Hinkle for obstructing road has proved quite an interesting case in many ways. It was on the first trial in progress something more than two days in which the jury failed to agree upon a verdict, and on last Monday the second trial began which ended at midnight on Tuesday, by the jury bringing in a verdict "not guilty" and at last John C. Hinkle is acquitted. The case was ably prosecuted by Saml. O'Fallon who attempted to establish the road by what is known as prescription—travel and use for ten years by the public and also by statutory proceedings by order of the county court. The defence was conducted by C. W. Thomas and F. C. Dungan who fought the prosecution inch by inch, claiming the road was neither a road by prescription nor by order of the county court. There seemed to be so much in the case that we failed to get a complete understanding of the whole matter but it is concluded that the case was well prosecuted and well defended. And great praise is spoken in favor of Justice Hoffmann who exhibited great patience and firmness in the trial of the cause. His rulings were prompt and certain yet given with great caution. And although one jurymen insisted that he could not be held by the justice like he could by the judge of circuit court, yet everything about his court had the appearance of a circuit court. The jury were of substantial men and the verdict is generally conceded to be a just one. We congratulate Mr. Hinkle upon his freedom.

Mr. Howard promptly armed himself with a club and proceeded to the place indicated by his little daughter, but George had sneaked the better part off and evacuated.

—Only a few weeks till Christmas. Already the children are contemplating Christmas presents. The young man is discussing in his own mind the kind of present to win the fancy of his fair dilectress. The husband would like to make his wife happy by purchasing something nice for her. Everybody will look about for the next bargains, and if the merchants expect to catch the trade, they will advertise their wares before hand. Those who want to be heard through THE SENTINEL, will have to get around pretty soon, as several have already engaged space.
